NEW YORK (For Release 10/25/11) — From a book-length poem to a multi-media experimental opera to its current incarnation as a CD, DARKLING gives a haunting portrayal of the emotions, terrors, and incalculable losses incurred during the period between the two World Wars and the Holocaust. Commissioned by American Opera Projects, DARKLING is based on Anna Rabinowitz's Darkling: A Poem (Tupelo Press, 2001) set to original music by post-classical composer Stefan Weisman. Featuring four singers (soprano / mezzo / tenor / baritone), a string quartet and 16 spoken-word artists, DARKLING movingly evokes the memory of the Holocaust as well as the human cost of cataclysmic events through a fusion of avant-garde theater, opera, cutting-edge technology and poignant language.

DARKLING is a remarkable story of love, loss, calamity and hope pieced together from bits of memorabilia such as fading photographs and yellowing letters found by the poet in a shoe box saved on a shelf in her deceased father's closet. Faceless, and mainly nameless, voices of DARKLING emerged for her from the old photos and letters – lost fragments of the Eastern European Jewish world destroyed by the Holocaust.

In his musical process, Weisman emulated the poem's overarching acrostic structure. He also made efforts to capture the poetry's underlying emotionality. "My goal was to take the heartrending ideas which I found in Darkling's poetry and make them instantly clear and direct through music," explains Weisman.

The score, rich in Minimalist riffs, recalls Schoenberg, Bartok and Schostakovich, and hints at Jewish folk idioms. It "is personal moody and skillfully wrought...most compelling when...the harmonic language becomes astringent and a raw, fitful quality erupts." (New York Times)

DARKLING premiered to great acclaim at the Classic Stage Company in 2006 in New York City before it went to New York City Opera's VOX at NYU's Skirball Center. According to the New York Resident, "Darkling...courses with charged generosity..." and is "...acute in its musical reach and dead smart as theater." DARKLING was also included in the Guggenheim Museum's Works & Process series, toured Europe in 2007, and was performed by The Center City Opera Theatre at the Philadelphia Fringe Festival in 2009.
